BSEE Foundational Elements

The Grid and Margins

BSEE uses a grid to keep items on the design page orderly. Use the grid as a guide across popular breakpoints.

Responsiveness

The BSEE website and its components have been built to be responsive for each major device type. Although, adhering to the grid, the components respond to breakpoints where it make sense. Elements adapt to the canvas width without compromising the balance of the overall layout. Elements designed to be responsive should be flexible in appearance and functionality.

Global Nav

The global nav is required for most pages. Exceptions include pages in the shopping cart, where we want the user to stay on task and not navigate out to other pages, microsites and landing pages. These exceptions often have their own style header that replaces the global nav.

Content Area

The content area contains the primary content of the page.

Footer

The Global footer is required on all pages. The global footer carries navigation to the Terms & Conditions, Privacy, Copyright, Sitemap and Social Media Links. The footer may also hold the Super Footer. The Super Footer contains the primary navigation organized by Business size, Tools, About Us and Contact Us. The Super Footer provides the user an easy glance to major sections of the BSEE site.

BSEE Navigation

Sidebar Navigation

The designer may need a design for a section of the site that is not represented in the primary nav and requires some navigation within the silo. The Article with Sidebar can be used to support related content. The Secondary Nav should be included in every page of the silo. The Secondary Nav links can include internal links to pages, pdf documents, as well as, links to outside pages.

Article with Sidebar

Tabset

The tabset can be used for related content. The example below comes from the FAQs page on the BSEE site. All FAQs can be included here. The format, allows the designer to use the full width of the page. The Title's for each Tab should be short and concise. Unlike the sidebar navigation, all the content in the tabset is included in a single page. The tabs do not link to content outside of the tabset.

Toggle

The toggle can be used in place of the Tabset when there are only two choices. Like the tabset, all the content in the Toggle page is contained on a single page. The links in the Toggle do not link outside of the page.
